

Evaluation of the Toy Safety Directive 2009/48/EC

Effectiveness, efficiency, relevance, coherence, and EU added value

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

Introduction

Directive 2009/48/EC on the safety of toys (Toy Safety Directive, TSD) regulates the safety of toys and the functioning of the internal market on toys. It was adopted on 18 June 2009 and has applied since 20 July 2011, except for its extensive chemical provisions which have applied since 20 July 2013.

The Directive aims to

- ensure a high level of toy safety, with a view to ensuring the health and safety of children, and
- guarantee that the same toy can be marketed throughout the EU by setting harmonised safety requirements for toys and minimum requirements for market surveillance.

The purpose of this evaluation is to assess how well the TSD meets its objectives. It will assess the Directive's effectiveness, efficiency, coherence with other EU and national legislation, relevance and EU added value.

Safety requirements of the Toy Safety Directive

The Directive lays down the 'essential' safety criteria that toys must meet before they can be marketed in the EU. Toys must also comply with any other EU legislation applicable to them. The essential safety requirements cover:

- general risks: the health and safety of children, as well as as parents, caregivers and others;
- particular risks: physical and mechanical, flammability, chemical, electrical, hygiene and radioactivity risks.

The Toy Safety Directive 2009/48/EC replaced the former Directive 88/378/EEC. It adapted the legal framework to technological developments and previously unknown safety issues. The TSD is applied and enforced in line with the 'New Legislative Framework'.

Stricter requirements for chemical substances

Compared to the former Directive 88/378/EEC, the Toy Safety Directive 2009/48/EC puts in place stricter requirements for chemicals:

- Chemicals that are liable to cause cancer, change genetic information, harm fertility or harm an unborn child (CMR substances) are no longer allowed in the accessible parts of toys beyond the concentration limits set in the Regulation on Classification, Labelling and Packaging of substances and mixtures, or unless they are considered safe following a rigorous scientific evaluation.

- 19 'heavy elements' like mercury and cadmium are not allowed in toy parts accessible to children beyond the limits laid down in the TSD.
- 55 allergenic fragrances have been banned. However, some of them, and another 11 may be used in certain toys provided that they are indicated on the label and comply with additional requirements.

How to demonstrate that toys comply with the Toy Safety Directive

The manufacturer has to use one of two methods (conformity assessments) to demonstrate that a toy complies with the Directive:

- self-verification by using the European harmonised standards;
- third party verification through a notified body (EC-type examination).

All toys sold in the EU must carry a CE marking. For more see placing toys on the EU market.

Harmonised European standards

The Toy Safety Directive does not specify the technical detail of toy safety requirements. The technical details are developed by the European standardisation organisations (CEN, CENELEC) at the request of the EU Commission and are laid down in harmonised European standards.

Notified bodies

Notified bodies are specially qualified test laboratories who perform EC-type examination and issue EC-type examination certificates. The EC-type examination is one of the two possible conformity assessments allowing toys to be marketed in the EU. Any Member State may designate ('notify') such test laboratories to the European Commission following a rigorous selection process.

Previous study on the Toy Safety Directive

An external study analysing the performance of the Toy Safety Directive was concluded in December 2015. The results of that study were taken into account when developing this questionnaire.

When you fill in this questionnaire

This questionnaire uses mostly single choice questions to make answering easy. You can use the option 'Don't know' or 'No opinion' when you cannot (or do not want to) answer.

Of course any further detail from you would be appreciated. You will find comments boxes after each question, and you may attach additional documents at the end of the questionnaire.

And then?

The consultation period will last 12 weeks. Once the evaluation of the Toy Safety Directive completed, a synopsis report and a summary of the results of all the consultation activities will be published on the consultation page.

Your opinion matters to us!

Thank you in advance for taking the time to contribute to this consultation.
